“ *Dear Mrs. Slemp and family,
I want you to know that I am sorry for your loss. Mr. Slemp was was my Civics teacher while I was in eight grade (1986-87). It was an eight am class and for a teenager that's really isn't ideal but I loved Mr. Slemp's demeanor and his enthusiasm for everything that encompassed from being a good citizen to how the government is run. I still have my civics text book if you can believe that. It was teachers like Mr. Slemp who inspired me to become a teacher myself and I taught for fourteen years in an elementary school. My thoughts are with you and I wish you peace.

“ Shelia

I know it has been some time that has passed and I am glad you could be there with him at the end. He was a strong and sure man. Secure in his faith in God and his wife and family. I saw that each time we had time with them. I know you loved him, as did your Mom and the rest of the family. I know, in his own way, he was and is proud of you. I believe that with The Lord he has a true and better understanding of humanity and true and unjudgemental love. P

“ Dearest Shelia, I'm so sorry to learn of the loss of your father. It is such a hard time and seems that the world just should stop for our pain but I think God urged us gently to keep going and gave us the quiet we needed to fill our heart with all the memories that will last through our own lives. I found it's the little things that dads say or do that keep coming back to us in our daily lives. The things you all share will too will be there when your together. When I pass a plate of pork chops to company at the table I can't resist saying "take two they're small" which is what my own father used to say. It just rolls out and I can feel his smile. So this old lady is here to give you a big hug and to assure you that your heart full of memories will last you for your lifetime. Love, Kathleen

“ When I think of Harry Lee I think of him coming up to my grandmother's house when I was a little girl to eat fried pies! He lived next door and he had a sixth sense when she was making pies that led him straight to our house as soon as they hit the pan. And I also remember a very kind man that loved us all well! My prayers and heart are with you Sue, Chris, Sheila, Mark and Ashley.

Love and blessings,
Susie
